Appels à communication

Life along the river

LIFE ALONG THE RIVER: INTERACTIONS BETWEEN HUMAN SOCIETIES AND VALLEY ENVIRONMENTS IN THE CONVERGENCE ZONE OF THE INNER ASIAN HIGHLANDS, 1600S–1950S

The convergence zone of the Inner Asian Highlands consists of the present-day parts of Qinghai, Gansu, Sichuan and Yunnan provinces in western China. It lies at the intersection of the Himalayan, Mongolian, Loess and Yungui plateaus, where the upper Yellow, Yangtze, Mekong and Salween rivers and their tributaries flow among towering mountains and segment the region into countless long valleys.

The conference will bring together scholars to discuss the interactions between the culturally diverse inhabitants and valley habitats in the meeting place of the Inner Asian Highlands. It aims to explore how different societies in the long “corridors” between Inner Asia and China proper have adapted to, negotiated with, transformed and interpreted their environments.

We welcome proposals for 20-minute presentations. Please send your working title and abstract of 300 words and a short bio to Marnyi Gyatso (Email: lfealongtheriver2021@gmail.com).

Due to the uncertainties with Covid-19, the conference will be held on-line from New York. There will be no registration fee.

Deadline for the Submission of Abstracts: January 31, 2021

Call for Abstracts

EXTENDED DEADLINE: January 15, 2021

Submit Abstracts at <https://icass.uni.edu/>

The International Arctic Social Sciences Association (IASSA) announces the 10th International Congress of Arctic Social Sciences (ICASS X) to be held on the campus of Northern (Arctic) Federal University, in Arkhangelsk, Russia, 15-19 June 2021.

ICASS X is being planned as hybrid event with both in-person and online participation. However, the exact format will depend on the COVID-19 situation. Please see more information and updates in the Road to ICASS X Newsletter. Registration fees will be announced and registration is expected to open in January. ICASS X will mark the 30th anniversary of IASSA.

ICASS is held every three years, bringing together people from all over the world to share ideas about social science and humanities research in the Arctic. ICASS IX, held in June 2017 in Umea, Sweden, attracted 800 participants from 25 different countries. In 2020 ICASS X was postponed until 2021 due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

IASSA is now seeking paper and poster abstracts.

Please submit them by 15 January 2021 to at icass.uni.edu.

All submissions should be in English. All abstracts will be peer reviewed. Notifications of acceptance will be sent in late January. Registration will open at the same time.

If you need a visa, please check <https://icass.uni.edu/visa-support>

ICASS X's theme is Arctic Generations: Looking Back and Looking Forward. Research on social sciences and humanities have a great responsibility to address the challenges for sustainable development in the Arctic, with a specific focus on past, present and future generations of Arctic residents. The generational nature of changes and responses have lately become more recognized by many policy makers and researchers. A focus on generations highlights the long-term, fundamental nature and scope of changes, impacts and adaptation strategies. Another focus of ICASS X is Indigenous knowledge and inter- and transdisciplinary research in the Arctic.

ICASS will welcome papers and posters on all facets of the Arctic and Sub-Arctic. And, as always, ICASS will also welcome contributions on all other subjects of relevance to IASSA members.

We encourage the participation of Indigenous peoples, northern residents, and decision-makers, as well as academics, so that ICASS X provides a rich environment in which to advance discussions on sustainabilities in the Arctic and the North and on other Northern matters.

Limited funds may be available to support travel by early career and Indigenous scholars: <https://icass.uni.edu/travel-support>

Qaidu and the Rise of the Independent Mongol State in Central Asia by Michal Biran

Qaidu (1236-1301), one of the great Mongol Khans, is better known as a rebel than as a state builder. Grandson of Chinggis Khan's designated heir, Ogodei, Qaidu became an active player in the Mongol arena only after the house of Ogodei lost its supremacy to the Toluids, descendants of Chinggis's younger son. The coup of the Toluids and their seizing of the Qa'an's throne were accompanied by purges of many of the Ogodeids, who had to give up their army and territories. Against this background Qaidu strove to revive the Ogodeid cause. From the 1270s onward Qaidu succeeded not only in constantly challenging Qubilai Qa'an, but also in establishing a kingdom of the Ogodeids in Central Asia. Qaidu's activities undermined the Qa'an's authority, shifted the balance of power in the Mongol empire and accelerated its dismemberment. Though the house of Ogodei departed from the stage of history after Qaidu's death, the Mongol state that he established in Central Asia, a state independent of the Qa'an's authority, survived him under the rule of the Chaghataids, his erstwhile rivals, allies, and successors.

In this first comprehensive biography of Qaidu, based on a close reading in Persian, Arabic and Chinese sources, Michal Biran reveals a highly important yet lesser-known chapter of the history of 13th century Central Asia, the Mongol Empire in its stages of disintegration, and the formative stages of the Chaghataid Khanate, that was in fact Qaidu's legacy.

Prof. Michal Biran (PhD HUJI 2000) is a historian of Inner Asia and a member of the Israeli Academy of Science and Humanities. She is the Max and Sophie Mydans Foundation Professor in the Humanities, teaches at the departments of Asian Studies and Islamic and Middle Eastern Studies, and is currently (2015) the director of the Louis Frieberg Center for East Asian Studies at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, where she also leads the ERC-funded project "Mobility, Empire and Cross-Cultural Contacts in Mongol Eurasia."
